

NOVEMBER ENRICHMENT NEWS

HUDSON'S HEADLINES

This newsletter is coming out later into the month of November because of an exciting opportunity and honor that took up most of my extra time in the beginning of the month. Thank you for your patience and understanding. I hope that your children have told you about what they have been working on in the enrichment classroom and that they look forward to Mondays and our time together. I know I do. With Thanksgiving coming up, this seems like a wonderful time to let you know how grateful I am that I to get to teach your wonderful children!

- Researching aspects of chosen NP by reading relevant print and digital texts, highlighting important information and learning how to cite sources.
- Reporting and showcasing research findings.
- Designing a torn paper landscape art project.
- Learning about podcasting and designing a NP podcast cover.

Social Emotional NEEDS of the GIFTED

Check out the National Association for Gifted Children's Social & Emotional Issues page. There you will find some great articles and tips for helping you understand your gifted child. One topic of particular interest is gifted kids not being gifted in all areas, or in other words, understanding asynchronous development. Another is learning about how gifted students experience the world with intensity, which is what makes them so astute and cognitively advanced. However, that also means many experience the world with emotional intensity as well. This often takes the form of self-criticism, perfectionism, resistance to closure, and emotional overexcitability.

The overall purpose of the proposed project is to use green screen and animation technology to provide students with opportunities to find their voices and to creatively communicate their ideas about their study of National Parks in meaningful ways to a variety of audiences.

I was surprised and honored to learn that I will be representing SHMES as our 2022-2023 Teacher of the Year. Your children are the reason why I love my job! I also had the privilege of presenting at the Georgia Educational Technology Conference and won a few awards there as well.

Below are some pictures of a some of the awesome things your children have been working on this month. Many students have heard back from the park rangers. Here are some students opening their mail, other students working on their research projects, and some others working with NP games after they have completed their daily enrichment assignments.
